Question 5

Amelia Burrows · Wed, 2019 May 08

How do we measure the spend on marketing? Do we have any mechanisms in place to monitor them?

In a company where there aren't rigid rules and processes for many things, how would you advice on budgeting for marketing? Products at different stages of their evolution require different budgets (as a percentage of their revenue).

1 Answer

Michelle Rodrigues · Thu, 2019 May 09

We don't have "rules", but may be it is useful to have some "thumb-rules". A product that is newly launching still needs marketing, and we cannot make that marketing spend as a percentage of revenue. So there may be a "new product marketing spend" category, where we take a budget. Once a product starts growing, at some point marketing spend gets aligned to revenue. The percentage of revenue spend will be high initially but will come down steadily over time. The answer is: we have to do this contextually.

The background window shows a chat conversation titled "Re: Promotions for Zylker SketcheZ across regions" with a sidebar on the left containing a profile picture and a list of messages. Overlaid on this is a "Start new chat" dialog box. This dialog has a "Title" field containing "Re: Promotions for Zylker, Chat @ 8:02 PM" and a "Participants" section with a profile picture and a plus icon. At the bottom of the dialog are "Start Chat" and "Cancel" buttons. To the right, another window titled "Re: Promotions for Zylker, Chat @ 8:02 PM > Meeting" is visible. It contains fields for "Topic" (filled with "Re: Promotions for ...-23 June"), "Host" (showing a crown icon and "You"), and "Mode" (with "Audio" selected and "Video" as an option). A "Recording" toggle is also present. At the bottom of this window are "Permissions" (with three red plus icons), "Cancel", and "Next" buttons. The entire interface is set against a light gray background with a colorful bar at the bottom.
